C-Comprehension:

English has different role in different parts of the world. In Britain, the USA, Canada, Ireland, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa and several Caribbean countries, English is the mother tongue (or first language) of a large part of population, and the official language of the country. That's currently around 350 million people. In other countries such as India, Singapore, Ghana, and Nigeria, English is 'second language' and has a special status , which means it might be one of several official languages , used for legal matters, in the media or for education. There are estimated to around 250 million people who use English in this way. And then there are all the other countries , where English is a 'foreign language' which can be learnt at school, and used for personal or business reasons. This is an expanding sector, with anything up to 1,000 million users .

English has become a global language. Some people have claimed this happened because it is a beautiful language, and because it has an easy grammatical structure. The truth is that it has achieved this status through the power and influence of the countries where English is used. Britain was a major world economic power from the sixteenth to the nineteenth century , trading in all parts of the world. The USA has held a similar position throughout the twentieth century and in our own age. The speed with which English has spread throughout the world has been helped enormously by the media-film, music and print materials like books and newspapers - and more recently by the computer revolution. Because it is so widely known, English is the official language of many international organizations like the World Bank , UNESCO, UNISEF , and the WHO , which helps to maintain its international status .

Today we have the situation where an Egyptian businessman may meet Japanese and Norwegian colleagues in Hong Kong to discuss a trade deal in English, the language that they all have in common. The increasing ease of international travel has helped this. They will probably have already discussed their business by telephone, e-mail and video conferencing before they actually meet. Using a shared language means that the conversation is easy , with no need for three-way translation and all the complications that can cause. These days we all live in a 'global village' where we need to talk to each other. A common language makes life easier .

Answer the following:

1. What's the real reason behind English becoming a global language?

2. What's the role of English in a country like Ghana ?

.....

3. How did English spread widely?

.....

C-Reading Comprehension

The most famous buildings

Fact File

Although New York is a much younger city than London or Rome, it has a lot of very interesting buildings which are worth seeing. It is, of course, best-known for its skyscrapers. Here are three of the most famous .

Empire State Building . New York's tallest and most famous skyscrapers is the Empire State Building and it is the best-known symbol of the city all over the world It was the tallest building in the world when it was completed. Work on building the Empire State had begun a few weeks before Wall Street crashed in 1929 and left millions of people without work. Since the building first opened, 85 million people have visited the observatory on the 102nd floor. In 1945, a US Army Air Corps plane crashed into the building. Fourteen people died and repairs to the building cost one million dollars .

United Nations Headquarters. In 1945, New York became the home of the United Nations, the organization which has been responsible for keeping peace in the world ever since the end of the Second World War. But the idea of a United Nations was not new. Governments had been talking about a way of keeping peace in the world since the League of Nations collapsed in World War II. In 1945, the world had been at war for nearly six years and people felt the time had come for an organization to promote world peace and build a better world .

Chrysler Building. Walter Chrysler had been working for a railway company when he decided that car was his real passion. So he founded the Chrysler car company in 1925 and built its headquarters in New York. At the time, the Chrysler Building was the tallest building but, only a few months after it was finished, it lost its title to the Empire State Building. The Chrysler Building is still one of the most famous and popular of New York landmarks and is certainly more beautiful than some of the more recent sky scrapers .
